Before it is printed in book form.

TORACE A. VACHELL, the English novelist, whose notable stories are issued by Mr. John Murray, the eminent London publisher, ranks high among modern writers of fiction, and on this side of the Atlantic is favorably known by his delightful narrative dealing with "Life and Sport on the Pacific Slope"-its clever and versatile author having spent about a score of years ranching in California and in game-hunting in the far West. His novels, which are written with unusual dramatic power, are cleverly conceived and properly wrought out, while his character drawing is excellent as well as life-like and convincing. Many of them are notable artistic achievements, which enthrall and delight the reader and engross his interest.

In 1895 Mr. Vachell published his first novel dealing with the conditions in the West, which met with high favor. Since then he has published about a dozen books, all of which have had an enormous and well deserved sale. Mr. Vachell took his leave of California in 1899 to pursue his subsequent literary career, his present home being in New Forest, Hampshire, England. Much further work is expected from his bright, resourceful pen, which is sure to add to his already gratifying reputation as a novelist and story-writer.

His latest work is entitled "The Turn of the Tide," a strong problem novel, and has been secured by
